The ecoagriculture approach encompasses both biodiversity-friendly agricultural production systems and practices, and their management in mosaics with natural areas and other landscape features to meet conservation, livelihood and production goals.

Why is it Important? - CBD Home

Agricultural biodiversity has been – and is still – shaped and developed through human activities and practices over generations. Farmers communities play a key role as custodians and managers of agricultural biodiversity. This is why local and traditional knowledge and culture are considered as integral parts of agricultural biodiversity management.
