Leter XXV WHILST man, in his first physical condition, is only passively affected by the world of sense, he is still entirely identified with it; and for this reason the external world, as yet, has no objective existence for him. When he begins in his sthetic state of mind to regard the world objectively, then only is his personality severed from it, and the world appears to him an objective reality; for the simple reason that he has ceased to form an identical portion of it.
